

Scott Oki

Scott Oki played a pivotal role in Microsoft's early expansion, founding the company's International Division, which quickly accounted for 40% of its revenue. Later, as Senior VP of U.S. Sales and Marketing, he guided Microsoft to surpass $1 billion in sales. Oki is best known for convincing Microsoft's leadership to shift focus from OS/2 to Windows, a decision that helped secure Windows' dominance in the market.

Following his retirement from Microsoft in 1992, Oki became a serial entrepreneur, venture capitalist, author, community activist, and prolific philanthropist. He founded or co-founded more than 20 nonprofits, including Densho and Oki Golf. His commitment to education and community service remains a defining aspect of his legacy.
